Working with Assembly members Cristina Garcia and Robert Rivas, and garnering support of over 80 organizations, we passed a historic natural carbon sequestration law, AB 1757, requiring the state to set ambitious targets for 2030, 2038 and 2045 and to develop other natural climate solutions. The UN's Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change prescription is clear: we must cut emissions in half by 2030 AND remove upwards of a trillion tons of carbon that we have already put in the atmosphere to stabilize the climate.

In order to ensure strong implementation of the law, we organized a two-day workshop in March, convening a coalition of natural and working lands partners to build common goals and identify pathways and strategies to transform our state's lands into a net sink for carbon emissions. With our partners, we are working directly with the expert advisory committee established by AB 1757 to assist them in developing science-based, bold targets for natural carbon sequestration on agricultural lands, forests, wetlands, deserts, and coastal environments.

Because of The Climate Center's work with Senator Dodd and our coalition partners on SB 833, the California Energy Commission established a new Community Energy Resilience Initiative that was modeled on our sponsored legislation. This program is leveraging $170 million in federal funds, matched by state funds, which will invest in planning for community energy resilience and clean electricity, prioritizing working-class communities. These communities suffer disproportionately when there is a power failure and also suffer a greater air pollution burden than wealthy communities in California.

In addition to our priority legislation, we played a key role in helping pass a package of climate bills pushed by Governor Newsom in 2022. We actively supported SB 1137, which requires 3,200-foot safety zones between new oil and gas wells and the places where Californians live, work, and play; SB 1314, which prohibits enhanced oil recovery, a practice that leads to even more dangerous oil drilling; AB 1279, which requires California to reach carbon neutrality and cut emissions to at least 85 percent below 1990 levels no later than 2045; and SB 1020, which establishes interim clean electricity targets, including a goal to reach 90 percent by 2035. All of these bills passed and were signed into law.

In 2023, we worked with Senator Nancy Skinner to introduce SB 233, a bill that aims to unlock the potential for millions of electric vehicles that will be sold in California to power homes during outages, lower energy bills for Californians, reduce air pollution, and make the electricity grid more reliable. The bill will require most new electric vehicles (EVs) sold in California to have bidirectional charging capability by 2030 allows EVs to not only be charged by the grid but also send power back to our homes, businesses and the grid when needed as we face more extremes and more outages.

The state expects to have 8 million electric vehicles on the road by 2030 with a greater energy storage capacity greater than the highest demand ever on the grid during last September's heatwave of 52 gigawatts. Currently, only a small fraction of California's electric vehicle fleet has bidirectional capability. By requiring that most EVs sold by 2030 are bidirectional, California can harness the momentum of a market moving swiftly toward an electrified future and make the best use of federal and state investments in EV infrastructure.

thousands of jobs and repairing environmental injustices. Climate-Safe California – and all of The Climate Center’s work – is guided by three core principles: follow the latest science, prioritize climate justice, and secure a just transition for workers. As of June 30, 2023, we had over 2000 total endorsements from nonprofits, businesses, elected officials, cities, counties and other governmental bodies, and individuals.

We have also built and engage with diverse coalitions to realize relevant policy components of Climate-Safe California, especially on facilitating community energy resilience with local scale solar and storage, setting aggressive emission reduction targets, phasing out fossil fuels, accelerating clean transportation, scaling up nature-based carbon sequestration, and securing the necessary funding for speed and scale implementation.

We had 300 people in attendance with featured speakers including Lauren Sanchez, the Governor’s Senior Climate Advisor, activist Nalleli Cobo, who spoke about the impact of oil and gas production on frontline communities, and numerous senators and assemblymembers from the California legislature. This event was followed by The Climate Center’s Advocacy Day, during which participants met with 48 legislative offices and discussed critical climate policies.

This year, through our webinar series, Envisioning a Climate-Safe California: Stories and Solutions, we produced eight webinars and had about 3,000 registrants learn about key policy solutions under consideration by California’s state decision makers.

As an official Observer NGO The Climate Center helped organize the attendance of California decision makers at the global climate meeting, COP 27, in Egypt. We hosted an official UN side event on vehicle to grid integration with state officials, held numerous press conferences, and organized an event on California's climate accomplishments that included four senators and three assembly members. COP is an opportunity to educate leaders from other parts of the world about climate solutions that California is leading on as well as an opportunity for state lawmakers to learn about and be inspired about solutions being implemented in other countries.

Our efforts have also garnered significant media coverage in California, raising public awareness and building momentum for accelerated, equitable climate action. This year, we were quoted, cited, or mentioned in 88 news stories between July 2022 and June 2023 and we published op-eds ("How electric cars can keep California's power on without more natural gas") and ("To cap breakthrough year, California's climate blueprint needs two key changes"). We've also held events in Los Angeles and San Francisco.

This year, we produced two policy reports: 1) "Equitably and Rapidly Decarbonizing California: Pathways to 65 percent below 1990 greenhouse gas emissions levels by 2030" to demonstrate how California can reach a more aggressive carbon reduction target with recommendations and considerations for state policymakers; and, 2) a hydrogen policy guidance paper, made available to state decision makers, partners and the public in June 2023. Both federal and state governments are investing heavily in hydrogen technology development and new hydrogen projects. The policy guidance offers a definition of green hydrogen, examines current impacts of hydrogen production on nearby communities, evaluates deployment models, and provides a set of policy recommendations for production, delivery, and application of green hydrogen.
